The ‘Big Write’ Excites Students About Literature

Author David Jowsey conducts inspiring student workshops

Sigel Press author David Jowsey recently completed a series of workshops in Middlesbrough primary schools, England, as part of ‘The Big Write’, a project involving visiting authors in schools.

Invited to visit, David combined nineteen years of teaching experience with his love of writing to take the children on a journey through the development of characters. Through analysis of a chapter from Dragons in the Sky the children were able to explore how the characters’ emotions, physical actions and facial expressions worked together to create atmosphere and tension, and the way in which these qualities worked together to broaden the reader’s understanding of the characters.

“Dragons in the Sky is an amazing adventure set against the most vivid backdrop of the moors. Atmospheric, frightening, and yet most thrilling – a book that must be read.”

- GP Taylor, International best-selling author of Shadowmancer and The Curse of Salamander Street.

Through analysis of a chapter from Dragons in the Sky the children were able to explore how the characters’ emotions, physical actions and facial expressions worked together to create atmosphere and tension, and the way in which these qualities worked together to broaden the reader’s understanding of the characters. Linked to dialogue and interaction with other characters in the chapter, the children developed a wider understanding of the importance of the character as a whole, rather than as a thinly created persona. They explored a set of given circumstances and placed themselves within fictional situations, studying how they would react themselves, as an aid to developing stronger character writing during follow-up activities.

Both pupils and teachers were very complimentary about David’s input, finding it a valuable resource and an ‘eye-opener’ to the world of books and publishing. The children asked intelligent questions about the writing and publishing process, and had the opportunity to hear an exclusive reading from the forthcoming sequel. Students also asked searching questions about the other books in the trilogy.

For David, having an opportunity to leave the classroom for a time to work with children as an author was a very enlightening and enjoyable experience. Since completion of the workshops, he has received letters and emails from numerous children who took part, thanking him for helping them and even sending stories which have been developed by the sessions.

Involvement in 'The Big Write' has led to an increase in book sales of Dragons in the Sky and David has been invited to return at a later date to continue his input.

Should you have any questions for David regarding the workshops, or any other matter relating to the Dragons trilogy, please contact him on dragonsinthesky@hotmail.co.uk

LETTER FROM THE CEO

Dear Clients, Customers and Friends,

January was off to a roaring start for us as we were busy with a variety of editorial and consulting projects, including a half day workshop on writing effective marketing prefaces and back cover blurbs. We split time split between the USA and UK.

In February, we were featured on the front page of the NE Ohio-based paper, The Post, with the headline, “Sigel to Give His Perspective on Publishing” which refers to the upcoming lecture on 12 March at the Medina County District Library Lodi Branch.

Speaking of engagements, my authors and I are involved with a variety of lectures and workshops over the next months. See Upcoming Events in this issue and also visit www.tsigel.com and www.sigelpress.com frequently as we add new listings. Do keep any of us in mind if you’d like us to present a lecture, workshop or seminar at your organization or institution.

In this issue we feature David Jowsey’s continued involvement in presenting inspiring student writing workshops. We will launch the second book of David’s thrilling science-fiction trilogy in December, so stay tuned for tantalizing teasers over the course of the year.

We also broach the subject of the challenges of establishing pricing and determining pricing objectives in the article, “How Should a Company Establish Prices?”

Later this month we will post a sample chapter of a very exciting Marketing Management Online Course. Delivered by global marketing guru Philip Kotler, this comprehensive course will be available for August 2008 classes and training programs. More information will be available on our websites or contact us directly to learn more.

Sun Tzu's The Art of War, an audio book read by Andrew Hogbin
Sun Tzu was a brilliant Chinese general who lived around 400 to 320 BC. He wrote "The Art of War" for his king, Ho Lu, and it is the oldest extant treatise dealing with the concepts and principles of conventional warfare. The lessons Sun Tzu drew then are as relevant today as they were over two millennia ago. This translation was first published in 1910 by Dr. Lionel Giles, a famous sinologist, who worked at The British Museum in London.

How Should A Company Establish The Price?

Pricing decisions are influenced by the underlying marketing and financial objectives of your business. Most companies have multiple products, therefore portfolio considerations are important. There are four strategic pricing objectives for you to consider.

- 1. Harvest. If the product is mature with a core of loyal users but faces increasing competition from low-price or superior-value products, it may pay for you to keep prices high and allow market share to erode gradually. The cash you generate can then be channelled into new products.
- 2. Maintain market share. If the product has long-run strategic value, you may aim at holding share. You should adjust prices defensively to prevent competitive erosion.
- 3. Growth. If your product is in an attractive market and has a differential advantage, you may use price as an aggressive weapon to build share or enter the market.
- 4. Quality leadership. If you have the luxury of being a leader in a premium price niche, you may be able to ignore the mass market and cultivate customers who can pay substantially more for superior products.

Are you faced with pricing issues? T Sigel Consulting can help you sort out a strategic solution.
